Retired Partner, Not for Profit
Practice Leader, KPMG

Carol is a recently retired partner of KPMG, where she specialized in the not-for-profit sector, providing audit, financial reporting, and professional services. Over her 35-year career, she established a track record of adding value to clients through operational and financial management insights and advice. KPMG is a Canadian leader in servicing the not-for-profit and public sectors, and Carol's significant and diverse client portfolio included foundations and charitable organizations across the social service, education, arts and culture, health, and government sectors. Carol was known for offering proactive advice and leading practices, working collaboratively with clients not only on their technical financial reporting matters but also on their strategic initiatives and major projects, including capital development, enterprise risk management, and process improvements.

Carol also developed and taught courses on not-for-profit technical and topical matters to enhance the professional development of her clients and colleagues alike, providing coaching and mentorship to KPMG team members to consistently add value to the NPO sector in GVA and across BC.

Beyond her client work, Carol served in leadership roles within KPMG GVA's people management and women in leadership programs and was board chair of KPMG Foundation. She continues to enhance her professional experience through volunteer work with community organizations and not-for-profits, serving on boards and audit committees including currently chairing the Finance & Audit Committee of the Terry Fox Research Institute and sitting on the board of the Canadian Accredited Independent Schools.
